A professional team, delivering bombing, airlift support, training and combat support to combatant commanders... anytime, anywhere

Senior NCO receives maintenance support award

A 317th Airlift Group member garnered top honors from Air Mobility Command by being named the top senior NCO in his field.

Senior Master Sgt. Lee Worthington, 317th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, was recently selected as the AMC Maintenance Support Senior NCO of the Year for 2003.

Sergeant Worthington was handpicked as the first-ever 317th AMXS Sortie Support Flight Chief. During the Combat Wing Reorganization in October 2003, he performed the task of integrating both the 39th and 40th Airlift Squadrons' Sortie Support Flights into one cohesive unit.

The task required the meticulous integration of more than 50 personnel, $20 million in tools and test equipment, and more than 1,000 benchstock items.

He then moved his new flight into a temporary facility in less than 24 hours while awaiting construction of the $72 million 317th AG Operations Aircraft Maintenance Unit building. He accomplished this with no degradation in the level of support provided to flight line operations.

"His unrivaled caliber of leadership was never more evident than when his support flight was inspected in 150 critical areas by the AMC Logistical Standardization and Evaluation Team in June of 2003," said 1st Lt. Glenn Lee, 317th AMXS aircraft maintenance unit officer in charge. "His lead-from-the-front attitude, painstaking preparations and tireless efforts enabled his flight to receive an 'outstanding' rating -- the first in AMC." Immediately following the inspection, Sergeant Worthington was specially selected by his commander to deploy in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Exercise tests WMD scenarios

By Master Sgt. Dan Carpenter
Dyess Public Affairs

Emergency response agencies from across Dyess and the City of Abilene are gearing up to participate in an exercise Wednesday that is designed to increase readiness and decrease mission impact from terrorist attacks.

Officials from the 7th Medical Group, 7th Civil Engineer Squadron, the base legal office and other base agencies, as well as their civilian counterparts will conduct Code Silver, a roundtable, crosstalk discussion about what Dyess would do in the event of a chemical or biological attack.

The all-day exercise will encompass one chemical and one biological attack scenario, and test emergency responders and support staff alike in areas of agent detection, patient decontamination, supplies, pharmaceuticals, and in-patient care.

Each scenario will test participants' capabilities in a high-stress environment which will include up to 300 casualties.

The exercise will be moderated by contract analysts from L-3 Communications Government Service, who will oversee and direct the course of the exercise through focused questions and cues.

According to 1st Lt. Lottie Moon, 7th Aeromedical/Dental Squadron Medical Readiness Flight commander, players will play themselves or their immediate supervisors.

"Code Silver is not an adversarial test of organizational or individual proficiency.

"Rather, it is a constructive learning opportunity in which participants can discuss and examine Deployed Dyess Airmen were recently surprised with a change in décor as posters, banners and letters from local Abilene schools were displayed prominently on the walls of the 40th Air Expeditionary Group's primary dining facility.

More than 30 of the hand-made tokens of appreciation, originating from kindergarten classes to high school Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps classes across Abilene, were hung by several of the group's members.

The signs, while all diverse, reflected similar themes -- patriotism, pride, and thanks.

"Our Airmen know that they are appreciated for their service and sacrifice," said Col. Jeff Beene, 40th AEG commander. "This is exactly what I would expect from the people of Abilene."

The idea to have banners from Abilene displayed in the dining hall came when Colonel Beene first arrived several weeks ago.

"When I first arrived and saw all the banners from the bomber units that had previously deployed here, I was immediately struck with the

AF reveals Thrift Savings Plan open

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas -- Civilian and military employees can sign up for, or change, their Thrift Savings Plan contribution amounts during the open season Thursday to June 30.

"TSP is a long-term retirement savings plan which everyone should consider," said Senior Master Sgt. Felipe Ortiz, superintendent of the Air Force Personnel Center contact center. "It's a great supplement to military and civilian retirement plans."

It's also important to note that TSP is not limited to investing in stocks, Sergeant Ortiz said.

"People can choose safer government securities as well," the sergeant said.

This open season applies only to regular contributions. It does not include catch-up contributions, as they are not tied to open seasons, said Janet Thomas, of AFPC's civilian benefits and entitlements service team.

The plan offers investors the chance for lower taxes each year they contribute while not having to pay taxes on earnings until they reach retirement.

Dyess crew flies longest combat sortie in B-1 history

By Staff Sgt. Zachary Wilson
40th AEG Public Affairs

Flying from a deployed location in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, a B-1 Lancer and crew from the 9th Expeditionary Bomb Squadron recently completed the longest combat sortie to employ weapons in B-1 history.

The record mission was a total of 21.3 hours and concluded with the B-1 providing close air support for ground forces by destroying anti-coalition militia forces, the compound where they were located and millions of dollars in heroin.

The mission began March 19, when the 40th Air Expeditionary Group launched a B-1 on a mission to patrol an area near Kandahar, Afghanistan.

Maj. John Nichols was the aircraft commander of the four-man crew.

"Prior to (the call for assistance), the situation was basically calm," Major Nichols said.

After more than 14 hours in the air with no calls for help, the crew had finally been cleared to return to base.

COACH'S CORNER

Over the last several weeks, we've had the opportunity to glimpse into the minds and leadership styles of many of Team Dyess' leadership.

As this tremendous series continues, I'd like to remind you that we can also learn much from great American leaders of the past. The Commander's Reading List, published in previous editions of the Peacemaker, is an outstanding source of wisdom that brings valuable lessons about leadership into the palms of our hands.

Likewise, Hollywood has brought some of America's greatest leaders to the silver screen. From watching these historical and fictional figures face their incredible challenges, we see that great leadership comes with many personalities, many styles.

But all great leaders have one thing in common -- they put their people and the mission before themselves.

Leadership

Never let the guidon hit the ground

By Lt. Col. West Anderson
7th Operations Support Squadron commander

The responsibility we place on our Air Force leaders is enormous. They make decisions affecting their sections, flights, squadrons or even higher on a daily basis.

We charge them with running daily operations, formulating and executing operational plans, building safety programs, planning annual budgets which use the American taxpayers' money wisely, ensuring the unit's full combat readiness and a whole host of other duties and responsibilities too numerous to present in this article.

If you ask the question "what is the most important job a leader has?" You will likely get a variety of responses. However, many would answer that the most important aspect of a leader's job is training our Airmen.

Though the answer may seem obvious, it is not an easy task -- we train our Airmen to be experts and be the best; to protect, employ, deploy, conduct joint operations, keep the peace and ultimately be prepared for war. Of all the duties we ask our leaders, training is among the most critical responsibilities. Training which allows the Air Force to conduct military operations anywhere in the world in all types of conditions and environments. But there is another question that a leader at any level must ask: "Who can step in if I'm not around -- who can pick up the guidon?"

This is a critical question in any military organization and operation; what happens if you get hit by the proverbial "bus?"

Does your unit continue to function at its current level if you are not around?

Is the next person in your chain of command structure ready for the responsibilities, which may be bestowed on him or her in your absence?

Have you provided the tools, mentorship and time to prepare them for the task if needed?

If you answered "no" to any of these questions you are falling short of your responsibility as a leader for two basic reasons.

First, while it is natural for anyone to take pride in the fact that the organization simply can't get along without them, in a military organization this can have disastrous consequences. If your section, flight or squadron cannot operate effectively when you are not around, you have effectively made yourself the Clausewitzian "center of gravity" of your respective unit.

Whether you're in deployed operations or back at home station makes little difference. It won't matter if the enemy takes you out of the picture or something less sinister does, the effect is the same -- the guidon will hit the ground.

Second, even if you are one of those who never miss a day, your tenure as the supervisor, first sergeant, flight or squadron commander is finite.

If your goal is just to guide events during your watch, then you are doing your unit and the Air Force a huge disservice.

It is every leader's obligation to prepare the leaders that will replace them in the future. The benefits are immeasurable. The guidance you give, the lessons you teach, the confidence you build will affect not only the individual, but the organization and the Air Force as well.

Your unit will gain a confidence and capability to adapt to virtually any scenario. When your mother or father first let go of that bicycle seat and watched you pedal off down the road, I assure you they did not feel less needed -- they felt pride! Pride in your success and pride in the fact you could ride on your own.

If you are fostering leaders within your organization and preparing them to step up to the task of leading and making decisions, then as you move on up and out of your unit, you can watch with pride as that unit pedals on down the road.

You can also be confident that you are doing all you can to ensure the United States Air Force remains the finest, most capable, most lethal Air Force in the world, and that the guidon will never hit the ground.

Mentors -- you are always on parade

By Lt. Col. Robert Gass
9th Bomb Squadron commander

Your personal example is your most effective mentoring tool as a front line leader.

It's the simplest one available. In fact, it's an unavoidable way to shape our future Air Force.

Wearing officer brass or a stack of stripes makes one a mentor of sorts, like it or not. A question to consider is how best to leverage the example we set to make it most valuable for our people. Allowing subordinates insight to our decision making process and creating opportunities to watch you in action are great starting points.

Opening your decision-making process to leaders in your unit offers them your example of leadership and management logic.

Allowing them to see how you frame issues, establish context, interpret your commander's intent, gather information, analyze outcomes and manage risk provides them with insight to your way of thinking and unique perspective.

The way you make decisions and have the unit put them into action establishes a baseline understanding your people can use to grow as supervisors and leaders in their own right.

As a leader, your viewpoint is normally different from your subordinates'.

It's natural that what's important and relevant to you may not be apparent to those in your unit.

Your decision-making process reflects these differences and, if shared, allows access to a more mature perspective.

Of course, every decision you make isn't appropriate for sharing, but many can be readily available mentoring opportunities.

Creating mentoring opportunities by example requires more imagination.

You can turn moments of great unit challenge into superb mentoring venues.

It takes courage and confidence, but it can be among the most effective techniques.

Allowing selected subordinates into your "inner circle" when dealing with tough issues gives you a dramatic way of showing how our Air Force leaders perform under pressure. It carries some risk if things don't play out right, but can leave an indelible positive impression on future leaders.

Every leader is an example. You're always on parade.

Making the most of your example can be an extraordinarily effective mentoring technique.

It's simple -- perhaps not always easy -- but simple.

As the 774th Expeditionary Airlift Squadron aircraft maintenance superintendent, his duties included leading 80 maintenance personnel in the maintenance of six C-130H aircraft and managing more than $5 million of support equipment.

“His uncompromising leadership enabled the airlift of 1,050 coalition troops and 1,000 pallets of vital combat supplies into Afghanistan with an exemplary 93-percent logistics departure reliability rate,” said Lieutenant Lee.

Upon returning to Dyess, Sergeant Worthington continued to set the pace. He directly oversaw the mobility preparations for the 317th AG’s return to Southwest Asia in December 2003, once again supporting OEF.

Simultaneously, he orchestrated the recalibration of test equipment and build up of vital supplies for the 317th AG deployment to Puerto Rico in support of Operation Coronet Oak.

“His meticulous planning paid huge dividends enabling the Coronet Oak package to answer the immediate call during the recent civil unrest in Haiti,” said Maj. William Walker, 317th AMXS commander.

“Sergeant Worthington is a cornerstone of the 317th. He has clearly earned this honor as the AMC Maintenance Support Senior NCO of the Year for 2003,” said Col. Paul Montgomery, 317th Airlift Group commander.

critical issues relating to the base’s response to chemical and biological incidents in an open, non-attribution environment,” said Lieutenant Moon.

The ultimate goals of Code Silver are three-fold:

◆ To provide medical planners and operators with a better understanding of the demanding requirement placed on them by chemical-biological incidents.

◆ To produce a framework for enhanced chemical-biological defense readiness throughout the Air Force medical community.

◆ To develop awareness, training and analytical tools that can have universal application for Air Force medical groups worldwide.

“Exercises, not rhetoric, will bolster integrated federal, state and local responses to domestic terrorism and disasters,” said Lt. Gen. (Dr.) Peach Taylor Jr., Air Force Surgeon General. “We can talk about this a lot, and we can write plans; but what’s going to be most important is to exercise the capabilities.”

The Code Silver exercise begins at 7:30 a.m. at the Heritage Club and will continue until 5 p.m. For more information, call Lieutenant Moon at 696-5362.

History

Just minutes before they were out of Afghanistan, the crew heard over the radio that ground troops were engaged in a fire-fight with anti-coalition forces in a compound, but their support aircraft were refueling and could not help out.

“This initiated a discussion amongst the crew members, and without batting an eye, we all agreed that we had to get involved,” said Capt. Christian Senn, defensive system officer for the B-1.

Major Nichols agreed. “It had been a long day,” he said. “But we had the fuel and weapons to help, and troops on the ground were in harm’s way.”

After receiving coordinates, the B-1 swiftly made for the area where the hostile forces were located.

“Did we get anxious? Absolutely,” said Captain Senn. “Three of the four on board were looking at our first combat strike -- a big deal as an aviator.”

Major Nichols was the only member with combat experience. He had flown dozens of combat missions when OEF first began and lent his experience to the mission.

As they approached, the crew realized the friendly forces were completely surrounding the compound and they would not be able to safely drop their bombs without putting U.S. soldiers in danger.

“Dropping weapons over the heads of fellow Americans is just too dangerous, save in an emergency situation,” said Captain Senn.

The crew notified the joint terminal air controller on the ground of the situation. Within minutes, the ground commander had moved his troops south of the enemy position and gave the B-1 crew the okay to drop.

“Here, another part of our training kicked in as a safety catch,” said Captain Senn. “We confirmed the target coordinates nearly a half-dozen times to ensure we were putting ‘iron’ on the target and not on our guys on the ground. We weren’t going to have any mistakes.”

Seconds later the bomber released three of its 2,000-pound guided munitions.

“There was a painfully long pause between the ‘thump’ of (the bombs) leaving the aircraft and the JTAC giving us words,” said Captain Senn. “His voice finally broke the silence, and it was said as if with a smile, ‘Direct hit!’”

The JTAC then requested the B-1 make a re-attack just in case.

“We began the second run, but could never get the final clearance to release. And therefore, could not make another drop,” said Major Nichols. “The other aircraft were back from refueling, and we were at ‘Bingo fuel,’ the minimum necessary to get back safely,” Major Nichols said. “So, we were cleared to exit the area.”

As they were leaving, the JTAC radioed that the initial run had been successful, and the enemy forces had been eliminated.

“As we left, we were satisfied and extremely tired,” said Captain Senn. “We had been flying over Afghanistan for 10 hours.”

The crew finally returned to base after 21.3 hours in the air -- making it the longest B-1 combat sortie in history where weapons were employed, and just 25 minutes shy of the overall longest combat sortie by a B-1.

The crew later learned the results of the drop from an air liaison officer from the Army division headquarters of the ground unit. The ALO told them six anti-coalition militia forces and an estimated $6 million in heroin had been destroyed in the attack on the compound. He also recognized the effort expended by the crew during the marathon mission.

“The guys’ ability to extend on station and ultimately bring airpower to bear was a huge success,” said the ALO.

The ground forces ALO agreed.

“They did an outstanding job under difficult conditions,” he said in an email to the crew. “Their actions helped to save the lives of the men I work with on a daily basis here.”

The words meant much to Captain Senn who saw the email from the ground troops within hours of landing. “When I read the email, the true significance of our role that day came to light,” he said.

“As for the destruction of the heroin, in the end the 40th AEG prevented that $6 million from funding further terrorist attacks, operations and efforts around the world or even at home. Everyone here played a part in this. I am very proud of the entire 40th AEG team,” said Col. Jeffrey Beene, commander of the 40th AEG.

“Eligible employees can take out loans and make in-service withdrawals from their TSP accounts,” Thomas said. “And you can keep your account, even if you leave military or federal civilian service.”

Investment money is deposited directly from each paycheck “so you never have to think about it,” Sergeant Ortiz said. “That makes it easy to ‘pay yourself first’ while only investing what you deem appropriate.”

The plan’s five funds are: the Government Securities Investment (G) Fund; the Common Stock Index Investment (C) Fund; the Fixed Income Index Investment (F) Fund; the Small Capitalization Stock Index Investment (S) Fund; and the International Stock Index Investment (I) Fund.

“As with any individual retirement account, the sooner you begin contributing, the better,” Ms. Thomas said.

Contribution elections or changes made between April 15 and June 12 take effect June 13, for both military and civilian people. Changes made on or after June 13 become effective at the beginning of the pay period following the one in which the election is made for civilians and the following month for military.

Some of the specifics of the military program include:

◆ Airmen can contribute up to nine percent of their base pay, as long as the annual total of tax-deferred investment does not exceed $13,000 for 2004. Airmen also have the ability to invest all or part of their bonuses or special pay.

◆ Those serving in tax-free combat zones are allowed up to $41,000 in annual contributions.

◆ Airmen can enroll through the Defense Finance and Accounting Service Web site at www.dfas.mil/emss. They can also enroll by filling out a form TSP-U-1 at local military personnel flights, finance offices and family support centers.

◆ Contribution allocations can be made by calling the automated ThriftLine at (504) 255-8777 or on the Web at www.tsp.gov. For general questions, call the Air Force contact center at (800) 616-3775.

Some of the specifics of the civilian program include:

◆ For civilians, contribution limits are based on which retirement system an employee has. For the current open season, the following contribution rates apply:

◆ Federal Employees’ Retirement System employees may contribute up to 14 percent of basic pay each pay period. Once eligible, the government provides matching funds of up to four percent as well as an automatic one percent each pay period, whether the employee contributes or not, making the government’s contribution five percent.

◆ Employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System may contribute up to nine percent of basic pay, but they do not receive any agency contributions.

◆ The percentage civilian employees may contribute will be restricted by the Internal Revenue Service’s annual limit of $13,000 this year, Thomas said.

◆ All Air Force civilian employees can make their TSP contribution elections or changes through the BEST automated phone system at (800) 616-3775. Hearing impaired employees can contact BEST by calling (800) 382-0893 or commercial 565-2276 within San Antonio.

Overseas employees enter the direct-access number for the country they are calling from and then enter 800-997-2378. Counselors are available weekdays 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Central Daylight Time.

◆ Contribution allocations are made by calling the automated ThriftLine at (504) 255-8777 or on the TSP Web site.

Thrift Savings Plan officials have announced several changes to the loan program effective July 1.

They are:

◆ A $50 fee will be deducted from the amount of each new loan.

◆ Participants will no longer be able to have two general-purpose loans at the same time; however, participants will still be able to have one general-purpose and one residential loan.

◆ When participants pay off one loan, they will not be eligible to apply for another loan for 60 days.

More information about TSP can be found in the booklet “Summary of the Thrift Savings Plan” on the TSP home page under civilian or uniformed services TSP Forms and Publications.

thought that the people of Abilene would jump at the opportunity to do something similar,” the colonel said. “I discussed it with Colonel (Garrett) Harencak, (7th Bomb Wing vice commander,) who took things from there. The result is that we have been overwhelmed by the showing of support expressed by the children from Abilene and Wylie schools.”

While the signs help boost the general morale of the group, they take on an even more personal meaning for many of the warfighters here who have children that attend the schools.

“Being able to see the sign that my daughter and the rest of her classmates signed is truly a blessing for me everyday,” said Tech. Sgt. Teri Herrera, whose daughter, Brooke, is a 4th grade student at Wylie Elementary School. “I am reminded daily that we have people back home that are thinking about us and praying for us.”

While the signs are special on a personal level for those with children enrolled in the local school districts, their message is not lost to those without children.

“Knowing that we have the support of the Dyess community and the Abilene schools makes me appreciate the job that I do every day,” said Airman Michelle Lake, a volunteer who helped display the signs, from the 40th AEG command section.

Ammo course gives Dyess Airmen hands-on look at 7 MUNS

Airman 1st Class Chris Ross guides a Joint Direct Attack Munition onto a bomb lifter before it is loaded onto a B-1 bomber to during the 2004 Phase I Operational Readiness Inspection, Jan. 25.

By Airman James Kang
Dyess Public Affairs

Dyess Airmen interested in learning more about the weapons employed by the 7th Bomb Wing can now attend a monthly combat Ammunition Course at the 7th Munitions Squadron.

The purpose of the COMAC is to educate Airmen on a critical part of the process to put “bombs on target,” said Tech. Sgt. Anthony Lavergne, 7th Munitions Squadron.

The course is offered to anyone interested in the process.

“It is important to get Dyess members on the same page on how the process and scheduling operates,” Sergeant Lavergne said. “It gives everyone a better idea of what we do here other than just building bombs.”

The class, which takes place once a month, runs from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. and consists of various tours around the 7th MUNS area, ammo procedures, bomb descriptions, and a look at the vehicles and trailers used.

The hands-on training, called Operation Dyess Thunder, takes place at the end of the day, where attendees complete actual assembly of the munitions.

The materials used for the training course, called war reserve material munitions, are separate from the actual materials used for wartime.

WRM munitions are those munitions required to support wartime activities until the Air Force industrial base can meet wartime demands.

WRM assets are pre-positioned at operating bases and are dispersed in the areas of responsibility at selected locations for air deployment in case they are needed.

Training munitions are expended on flying sorties. Munitions quantities are based on flying training sorties and events as set by parent major command, approved syllabus training, operational readiness inspections, select exercises, competitions and special demonstrations.

As a preventive measure, a minimum distance between inhabited buildings and explosive locations must be established in case accidental explosions were to occur, said Sergeant Lavergne. There must also be a minimum distance from a potential explosive site to the base boundary.

The intermagazine distance is the minimum distance allowed between any two explosive storage locations. The separation required depends on type of magazine, location, quantity and type of explosive stored.

The final product is produced after going through a series of steps.

First, the accountability section receives a request from aircrew training and then produces an issue document for storage. Storage then pulls the items from the storage structures and delivers the assets for inspection.

An inspection crew makes sure the items are serviceable for assembly. Conventional maintenance then picks the items up from inspection and brings the assets to their bay.

They then begin assembly. Once the build is complete, they place the munitions on trailers and tie them down. They are then delivered to the flight line for final assembly.

“Once the assets are ready for the assembly line, the process is simplified and can be pieced together by anyone with the proper guidance,” said Sergeant Lavergne.

“The overall process is pretty interesting and is surprisingly easy to assemble once on the assembly line,” said Airman 1st Class Dominick Cave, 7th Operations Support Squadron targets intelligence analyst after attending the course. “The class was very informative and gives a better idea with what type of weapons Dyess deals with.”

JCAHO Survey

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will conduct an accreditation of the 7th Medical Group April. 19 through April 23.

The purpose of the survey will be to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards. The survey results will be used to determine whether, and the conditions under which accreditation should be awarded the organization.

Joint Commission standards deal with organizational quality of care issues and the safety of the environment in which care is provided. Anyone believing that he or she has pertinent and valid information about such matters may request a public information interview with the commission's field representative at the time of the survey. Information presented at the interview will be carefully evaluated for relevance to the accreditation process. Requests for a public information interview must be made in writing and should be sent to the commission no later than five working days before the survey begins. Such requests should be addressed to:

Division of Accreditation Operations
Accreditation Service Specialists
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations
One Renaissance Boulevard
Oakbrook Terrace, IL 60181

The Joint Commission will acknowledge such requests in writing or by telephone and will inform the organization of the request for any interview. The organization will, in turn, notify the interviewee of the date, time, and place of the meeting.
